LOGLINE

A young Indian boy who survived the horrors of Bacha Bazi in Afghanistan grows up to become a RAW agent — and returns to the same world that destroyed his childhood to dismantle the ISI-backed terror network operating in the shadows of Kabul.

GENRE & FORMAT

- ▶ Genre: Espionage Thriller / Action Drama
- ▶ Format: Feature Film | Expandable to OTT
- ▶ Language: Hindi (with Pashto, Dari, Urdu dialogue)
- ▶ Tone: Gritty, grounded, emotionally devastating — then triumphant

Afghanistan. A country where three powers are in constant collision — India's quiet diplomatic investment, Pakistan's ISI playing puppeteer, and the Taliban navigating both. This is not a cartoon war zone. It is a city of tea shops and ancient bazaars where men in suits make decisions that kill thousands.

India's ₹20,000+ crore investment in Afghanistan — roads, dams, schools, the Parliament building — bought something deeper than infrastructure: relationships, trust, and a presence that Pakistan has always feared and tried to erase.

Bacha Bazzari — the sexual exploitation of young boys by powerful warlords — is the film's dark heartbeat. Documented, real, and protected for decades by those in power. The Taliban banned it. ISI-backed warlords used it as a tool of control. This contradiction is the moral engine of the story.

PROTAGONIST — ARYAN

Origin

Aryan is 9 years old when he is kidnapped from a border town — sold into the Bacha Bazi network operating under an ISI-protected Afghan warlord. For two years he survives in captivity — observing, memorizing, calculating. He does not break. He adapts. He learns languages. He watches how the network operates.

The Escape

Aryan escapes not through brute force but through intelligence — exploiting a rivalry between two commanders, creating a distraction, disappearing into the city. He is 11 years old. He has already seen more than most soldiers see in a lifetime.

The Man He Becomes

Recruited by RAW at 22 after years of obsession with the network that destroyed his childhood. He is not a conventional agent. He knows the culture, the language, the people. He has scars that make him unreadable to enemy and ally alike. His handler calls him a weapon. He calls himself unfinished business.

STORY STRUCTURE

ACT ONE — THE WOUND

We open in the present — Aryan in a briefing room in Delhi, RAW headquarters, being handed a dossier. Then the film cuts back. A village. A child. A van. We do not look away but we do not exploit. We understand what happened to Aryan in three devastating scenes. Then we watch him survive, escape, and disappear.

ACT TWO — THE RETURN

15 years later. Aryan is deployed to Kabul under diplomatic cover — India's quiet re-engagement with post-2021 Taliban Afghanistan. His mission: identify and neutralize an ISI cell recruiting Afghan youth for terror operations into India. But as he goes deeper, he discovers the same warlord network from his childhood is still active — now under new protection, new branding, same evil.

His unlikely ally: a mid-ranking Taliban commander named Rashid — a man who lost his own brother to the same Bacha Bazi network and has his own score to settle. The India-Taliban alliance is not ideological. It is built on shared enemies and mutual advantage. Both men know it. Both men use it.

ACT THREE — THE EXPOSURE

Aryan dismantles the network from the inside. But the mission climax is not just extraction — it is exposure. He smuggles evidence to international journalists, diplomatic back-channels, and Indian intelligence. Pakistan's ISI is implicated not just in terrorism but in covering up child exploitation for two decades. The world cannot look away.

The final scene: Aryan returns to the site of his kidnapping. It is empty now. He stands there. No dialogue. The audience understands everything.

EMOTIONAL CORE

This film lives or dies on one question every audience member asks halfway through: What do you do with something that was done to you?

Aryan's answer is not revenge in the Hollywood sense — it is dismantling the system so the next child does not have to survive what he survived. That is what makes this story matter. That is what will make audiences cry and stand up at the same time.

WHY THIS FILM / WHY NOW

- ▶ Real geopolitics — India's Afghanistan ties, Taliban's complex relationship with Pakistan, ISI operations are documented facts that audiences can verify
- ▶ Afghanistan is visually unexplored on Indian screens — Kabul, Kandahar, the Panjshir Valley offer a completely fresh cinematic canvas
- ▶ The moral ambiguity is the point — India working with Taliban makes audiences uncomfortable, and that discomfort is the conversation the film wants to start
- ▶ Bacha Bazi is real and almost completely unknown to Indian audiences — awareness through cinema is legitimate and powerful
- ▶ India vs ISI remains the emotional engine — Afghanistan is the arena where India outsmarts Pakistan on unexpected turf

COMPARABLE FILMS

- ▶ Dhurandhar (2024) — Real geopolitics, RAW operations, ISI as villain
- ▶ Raazi (2018) — Emotional intelligence over action, a protagonist who survives by being smart
- ▶ Zero Dark Thirty (2012) — Mission-driven, morally complex, real-world events as backdrop
- ▶ Taken (2008) — Child trauma as emotional fuel for a revenge/rescue narrative
